Counterfactuality and Factuality

Monday, 4 July 2022, H80

It is commonly assumed that 'would have' conditionals can but need not convey antecedent counterfactuality. In this talk, I argue against this view. First, I look at data from the literature and show that they are inconclusive. Second, I present novel data about conditional-like sentences that are antecedent factive or consequent factive or both and show that they undermine the majority view.
